The processing step is such that it could take upto 20 minutes. So, I want to run my script in the background so that i can close the terminal window and come back later and find the process going on. I know i can do this by using the ampersand & at the end of the line and the script will execute in the background. #!/bin/sh ./myScript.sh & However, I was wondering if there is a way in which i can give some more options to bash or a way to specify some parameters to myScript.sh that it should take before executing it. i.e. ./myScript.sh -argument -anotherargument -yet anotherargument A: bash is a shell, so you can use the -c switch to specify a specific script to run in the background, like so: bash -c "./myScript.sh -argument -anotherargument -yet anotherargument" & Note that you don't have to use & in your code, you can leave it out.
