We see that our galaxy is vast and contains millions of stars. It is filled with planets. Some of these planets were formed by stars like our sun that are orbited by planets of other size or composition. Astronomers have found that the number of planets per star is random. Some have found that the percentage of stars with planets is highest where stars are over three times more massive than our sun and where the star rotates rapidly. This type of star is called a giant star and is over 300 times more luminous than our sun. They are found to be more common than the red dwarf, where a star is equivalent to our sun in brightness, but smaller in mass. It is thought that planets are more common around these more luminous giants because of the relationship between the two. One planet per star is still not an excess of planets. The Sun is one of approximately 150 billion stars. The universe is galactic. The galaxies are intergalactic, and these are galactic. Within galaxies or intergalactic space there are clusters of stars, and these are galactic. Within galactic clusters there are other clusters of stars, and these are galactic. Finally, within galactic clusters there are groups of stars, known as extragalactic space. Finally, they are part of galactic clusters, galactic clusters. There are two types of stars. a) First there are the red dwarfs, the biggest group of stars in our universe. So the next question is how many red dwarfs are there? This question has two answers; (i) how many stars are there? a big question, and (ii) how far apart are they? an easy question. There are 4 billion stars in our solar system, and each of these stars has planets, which may have moons. The nearest star is about 12 light years away, or about 2 trillion miles. The percentage of stars with planets is highest where stars are more massive, rotating quickly or where their structure is evolved. It is possible that it is more likely that there will be planets orbiting a more massive star.
